Mahatma Gandhi said: "Be the change that you wish to see in the world." I can not argue with that.

I think that poet means: if you want to live in the world full of happiness you must give all you can do to the worldhood. For example, if somebody wants to see the clean town he must not go forward the rubbish that is leaning on the ground with "closed eyes". Except of just talking about this problem the person must also clean the street by himself. If everyone just do one step to reach the goal, then it will lead to the greatest world.

To support my opinion, I would like to tell about roman: "Don't shoot the white swans". The main hero which name is Egor, is a sweetheart man. Egor wants to see the forest near his house greeny. He started working as a forestkeeper. All people in the town were illegal logging, which driven a deforestation in the region. Although, Egor bought white swans, cleaned the territory and saved its plant and animal species. The forest started to breath like it was 50 years ago.

As a conclusion, we live in the world, where every decision have to change the whole history. So, we must think properly before starting to do something.
